Fellini, de Sica, Rossellini, Visconti, Bertolucci, Antonioni - Italian cinema has its fair share of masters who have influenced filming around the world. This top 10 list is not intended as a compilation of italy's best films, but rather as a starting point for exploration. Ciao ciao! Hulton Archive/Getty Images It's unthinkable to talk about an Italian film without Federico Fellini and La Strada (1954), a harrowing classic about a poor girl who is taken away by a cruel strongman to become a circus performer. i can't resist. It offers great performances by Anthony Quinn and Giulietta Masina. The film won an Oscar in 1957 (it was released in the United States in 1956) for best foreign film - it was first awarded - and several Italian film awards, including best director. The American Film Institute calls it one of the most influential films in history. For more early Fellini, check out Nights of Cabiria, also from Masina. Vittorio de Sica's neo-realistic 1952 film about an old lady who is devoid of dignity is sad but not sentimental. Legendary film critic Roger Ebert called it one of Italy's best neo-realistic films - one of the most simply self-made and does not reach for effects or strain to make his message clear. De Sica is also known for the Bike Thief of 1948. Silver Screen Collection /Getty Images 1900 (1976), Bernardo Bertolucci's epic story about a peasant and landowner in the first half of the 20th century, starring Robert De Niro and Gerard Depardieu. If you don't have time - 1900 lasts longer than five hours - try The Conformist (1970) or the famous Last Tango in Paris (1972) with Marlon Brando and Maria Schneider. Michael Ochs Archives /Getty Images The Battle of Algiers (1966) is Gillo Pontecorvo's legendary advocacy about the struggle for Algeria's independence from France in the 1950s. This timeless and powerful film was nominated for three Oscars. This expansive and all-encompassing 2003 drama by Marco Tullio Giordana, the latest film on this list, follows two brothers from 1960 to 2000. The film was first shown in Italy as a TV miniseries and released in the US as two films after three hours. Time flies. In his review for The New York Times, A.O. Scott says: History (Giordana) must say... it is full of nuances and complexity, but it is also as accessible and engaging as a great 19th-century novel. Fellini's next masterpiece, La Dolce Vita (1960), depicts Marcello Mastroianni as a paparazzo, which Anita Ekberg through the streets of Rome and straight to the Trevi Fountain. La Dolce Vita won the Academy Award for Best Costume Design in a Black and White Film and was nominated for three others, including Best Director. Roberto Rossellini's groundbreaking 1945 film depicts the struggle of Roman citizens to resist in the final days of the Nazi occupation during World War II. The film was shot very shortly after Rome was liberated by allies and star Anna Magnani. Kristen M. Jones, writing in The Wall Street Journal in 2014, he says that the last moments of the film are still a rousing call to conscience and hope. Cath Clark, writing in The Guardian in 2010, said: There is probably no film to compete with the humanism and clarity of the purpose of Rossellini's neo-realistic masterpiece. Hulton Archive/Getty Images Monica Vitti plays a woman searching for a missing friend in the Mediterranean in Michelangelo Antonioni's groundbreaking 1960 film, which won the Cannes Jury Prize. Corbis via Getty Images/Getty Images Burt Lancaster, Claudia Cardinale and Alain Delon play in the 1963 epic story of elegiac grace in Luchino Visconti's Sicilian tale of revolution and fall in the 1860s. Giuseppe Tornatore's sentimental love letter to the 1988 films won an Oscar and a Golden Globe for Best Foreign Language Film in 1990 and a Jury Prize at Cannes in 1989. This magical film tells the story of the life of an Italian director and is told in a flashback. LiveAbout uses cookies to provide you with a great user experience.
